Well, they were all extremely well behaved. There were no naughty children running around. They must have been quite overawed by the whole, the whole process. You know it was all happening to them and they probably, when they set off from home, no idea as to what was going to happen. But everybody was extremely mindful of the fact that these little children had been brought from their own parents and were separated and were in a strange part of the, you know they didn't know anything about. But there were a lot of people who offered homes for the children. A friend of mine in Pilkington Avenue had a little boy to stay I remember I used to go and see and read to him at one time.
