No we weren't treated any differently at all but there was just one, one sad time when we had some bites on us, Tony and myself and I told the billet lady and she said "Oh, you've got fleas", so I said, I was very daring, I said "No we haven't got fleas" and that was daring for me because I was you know, you don't speak to unless you're spoken to with adults. And she said "Oh yes there is", and so we went to school, and the school nurse was on duty that day and so we showed to her and she said "let me have a look" and she said "oh no those are midge bites" and she said "all you need is some calamine lotion", but when we got back home, Mr and Mrs Mordie, we called them that, they stripped off the bed while we were at school and said "you have got fleas because you must have brought them with you because we've found them in the bed". So that was very, very upsetting it really was, but anyway we got over that, we did, but apart but apart from that I think we were very happy.
