“They decided that we had room for evacuee, for one evacuee, and fair enough. When the time came that the evacuees were coming I went down with my mother, she asked me to go with her, to where the evacuees were coming to, and they more or less most of them were allocated to people and we were still waiting and then a lady came up and said that she had this young girl but the problem was that she had a brother as well. Could my mother see her way clear to taking the two? So no contest is it? You take the two you know, so we had the two. And a little while after, months, it'd be a few months, the older, the brother he said that one of his friends was not very happy where he was, would we do anything about that, so eventually we ended up with three evacuees. Ha ha. You know.”
