“Oh yes, we each had our own garden, eventually, not in the beginning obviously and they were around our like these big huts. I remember mine as about like that, grave size thing. And I don’t know where we got the seeds from but we all grew parsnips and things, and then we had rabbits and I made a pair of gloves out of my rabbit, saltpetre and but, in the years ahead, at least it’s something that I know, and once or twice it has come in, you know even remembering the saltpetre that you dried, put it on. Yeah I don’t think we learnt anything stupid. But the teachers couldn’t have been that much older than us, you know ten years, which I know that time of your life is a lot.
