“Well, you know you’ve got to remember I was a townie, and in a town, especially as a child, you can’t see very far before you see a building. I mean you look and there’s a building, you look around and there’s a different building, so you can’t see the horizon, the proper horizon because it’s blocked off by buildings, and of course getting to Staffordshire, where we were, it was incredible because we were, I could see a big, huge sky, I could see the hills round the back and to the right there was a pine forest that was later chopped down, that’s another interesting story. And it was just amazing to be in the countryside to see cows and sheep and well, I saw lambs being born later in the spring you know, that’s staggering, and of course going to get the milk going to a nearby farm to get the milk in a little white enamel container, you know?”
