“In the last dormitory I was in, with my dear old friend Miss Brown, erm, she would get up first and go and have a bath and then she would go and wake up the children and I would go to the bathroom, and when I came back the children had all gone into the showers, they came back and got dressed and tidied their lockers. Everything had to be folded and put away, then off they went to breakfast. They went to school in the mornings and played games in the afternoon. I only taught half the day, I don't know how many classes, I took the English, and I took the dancing and the sport.”
